Career and College Readiness Website

New emphasis on career preparedness for Texas high school students is here. The Texas Education Agency includes College and Career Readiness Standards as one of its statewide secondary school programs. According the website of the Texas College and Career Readiness Program, college graduates earn almost half as much more income than non-college graduates; and over the past ten years, the Texas high school graduation rate has increased faster than that of the national average (a ratio of 6.8% to 2.8% respectively). The Texas College and Career Readiness Program creates and puts into effect the application of the standards for secondary students' success during and past their years of higher education. Visit the website to find out more.
